"Kid Panda & Red Panda"

CHARACTER PROFILE

Kid Panda™

Built like a Budha, round as a ball, broad at the shoulders, about 5 feet tall.

Serious yet fun loving, boisterous and loud, a guardian of goodwill this panda is proud.

Kid is the more mature of the two pandas often finding himself playing the role of big brother to Red. He has a fondness for eating all types of food, especially Chinese take out when he's feeling homesick. Most of all, he has a sweet-tooth for bamboo.

Attributes:

- Enormous 300-pound size
- Dense mass for strength
- A brawler with ancient Chinese fighting skills
- Goodwill

Vulnerabilities:

- Often homesick
- Watching out for Red

CHARACTER PROFILE

Red Panda™

Fast as a bullet, eye on the ball, agile and limber, about 2 feet tall.

Playful and mischievous, the life of the crowd, a guardian of goodwill this panda is proud.

Red is the more immature of the two pandas often finding himself needing to be saved by Kid. He is a prankster and sees the humor in most situations. Unlike Kid he is tired of eating Chinese take out and often enjoys more variety.

Attributes:

- Small 2 foot size
- Energetic
- Ancient Chinese fighting skills
- Goodwill

Vulnerabilities:

- Small 2 foot size
- Impatient

The year was 1279 and the mountainous southwestern landscape of China, which was once lush with golden and green forests of bamboo, was becoming a barren wasteland; the remnant of many a conquerer. In this vast and changing land known as Grand China, many a panda were displaced, left homeless, without food, or hunted for their skins. Two pandas, one red panda and one giant panda, became companion travelers in search of food and a new home. They headed north.

Meanwhile, Kublai Khan, the grandson of Genghis Khan, was residing in his latest conquest, The Empire of the Northern Sun where he was planning his next move. This would later be the destination of the northern-bound pandas.

On a warm sunny morning a traveler came to the Court at Cambaluc bringing with him gifts from abroad for Kublai Khan.

The traveller was Marco Polo, the famous explorer, merchant and trader. He brought many intriguing and unique gifts for Kublai, the most impressive being two magical golden medallions that he had found at the foot of the elusive and mysterious Fountain of Youth. The medallions were believed to have supreme powers and the gift of eternal life for he who possesses them.

Kublai Khan was very impressed and gave Marco many lengths of the finest golden silks. They celebrated in the court yard until the dawn of the following day. Kublai Khan, although very grateful, stowed the medallions away in The Temple of Ten-Thousand Treasures.

Kublai believed the medallions would make him childlike if he used them before the last of his senior years. So in the well-guarded temple they waited. They lay in the open palms of the giant frowning Budha statue in the center of the sacred temple. Kublai Khan then left in pursuit of his next battle from which he never returned.

The temple guards assigned to its doors succumbed to an ever tempting greed and made off with many a treasure and loot. The temple became a ruin structure where two weary pandas found shelter and slept in the palms of the giant Budha.

One morning, after many years had passed, a beautiful rainbow pierced the stained glass window at the roof of the temple and caressed the belly of the Budha statue. As the frowning Budha smiled, the pandas were awoken from their long slumber and found themselves dressed in the uniform of temple guards, their chests adorned with the medallions of power and eternal youth.

Magically, the temple was once again restored to the beautiful place it used to be and its gardens were strewn with fields of flower and bountiful forests of bamboo. The pandas had found the home they had been searching for and they guarded it against all unwelcome intruders.

In the years that followed, the empire had become a peacable kingdom for all species of friendly animals seeking refuge from man's world. They were able to live their lives fully and without threat.

Seven-hundred years had passed and the empire remained unspoiled, hidden in forest so dense and secluded it no longer needed its well-loved temple guards, the panda duo, Kid Panda and Red Panda, who had guarded it with the utmost care and attention.

Over the years, the pandas heard many intriguing tales of the world outside their peaceful empire. They continued to grow anxious and very curious, so one day, with the power of the sacred medallions and the blessings of their forest friends they embarked on a voyage, a journey of discovery and goodwill. They set their wooden boat adrift down China's famous Long River and set their sights on the new world...
